Family News of 2013

March 2013 - my eldest goes for surgery on her hip and doesn't come round from surgery as expected. After CT and MRI scans we are informed of a large growth in her brain.

My middle daughter is unmarried in a Mosave we are not permitted to attend. In July 2013 she gives birth to a daughter again we are kept at arms length.

2013 was a particularly difficult year for us as a family, the worry that my eldest had this growth in her brain which came out of the blue & with seizures. I was not part of my middle daughters life nor my first born grandchild. My youngest suddenly went off the rails before letting us know she was pregnant, weeks later my eldest announces her pregnancy.

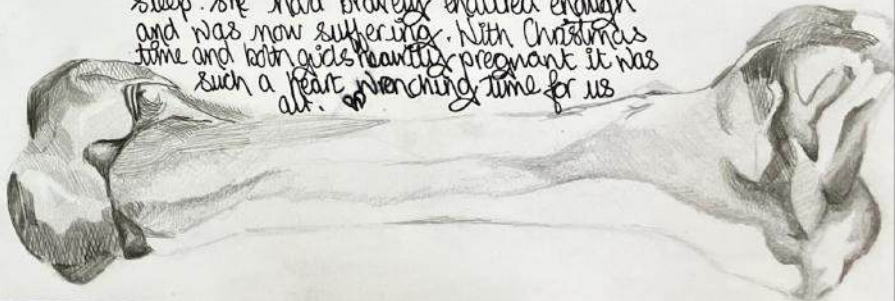

After a troubled few months my 15yr old announces she is pregnant. Shortly after my eldest announces she too is expecting. The shock of both had a huge impact.

August 2013 After suffering a bout of recent seizures we are told our beautiful young boxer has a brain tumour.

Sadly and with such an aching heart I took the decision to have Bailey put to sleep. She had bravely endured enough and was now suffering. With Christmas time and both girls heavily pregnant it was such a heart wrenching time for us all.

Calm before the storm...

Much of the early days were a blur due to the situation we both found ourselves in.

Hospital appointments due to a severe skin condition alongside all the other meetings took a lot of our time up.

It broke my heart to care for your skin with creams & lotions and special clothing. It really must have hurt.

This image is a very prominent one for me as it was taken at birth. It (unknowingly at that time) depicts me being left in the tubal sense holding the baby.

You have since filled my world with a huge amount of love & laughter.

Thank You

You were such a calm baby and slept so well.
